

Letters

Big pharma's big sell to doctors

Friday June 30, 2006

The Guardian

Consumers International is right to point out that pharmaceutical marketing practices are highly opaque, but neglects to ask why. The pharmaceutical industry is barred from informing consumers about their products, so they have to target the middlemen: doctors. If it were allowed to advertise directly to consumers, there would be no need to shower doctors with gifts.

Anne Jensen

Researcher, Stockholm Network