

The NHS needs a break from further reform

Thursday March 30, 2006
The Guardian

Waiting times have fallen and the NHS has indeed had "the best year since it was founded". However, to dismiss the public's legitimate concerns about value for money is irresponsible. Neither an £800m deficit nor the recent cuts in services and jobs at trusts across the nation can be swept under the carpet.

Terry O'Dwyer

Manager, health and welfare programme, Stockholm Network